"The Edmonton Elephants Ultimate Finale"

The Edmonton Elephants Hill Log* episodes

It is the end of yet another year of work and toil. And as we floor the gas to escape this sanctuary, we know that our job to establish the "divine settlement" is over. It took blood, sweat and tears, but we made it, with just enough blood to make it back. Though there could've been a lot more luxury to install, the gritty, challenging part is over, and Killiney Beach, Westside Road, Edmonton Elephants and the Mystery persist beyond anything we could have ever imagined…

Denouement.

The ending to The Hill Log.

Plot

The entry opens up on the second-last day of the family's stay on their property. The sun reflects on the trees making them look golden, like it is fall. Nick goes on a Quad Ride on this day with people they met earlier this year. They go up into the bush of the Okanagan with friends Rudy and Dennis, seeing lots of scenery. They tour some lakes and get lost in the trail system, but get home.

On the last day, everyone packs up. There are multiple omens which denote that this is the end; the swimming rope at the beach has floated away, the water level has fallen as everyone has left. Nick tears down the rotting log retaining wall which was established 6 years prior, ending an era of encampment and family vacation. Everyone drives off the hill, unhooks water from neighbor Tom's property and goes onto new adventures. The future is "beyond their comprehension".

Production

While this was the end of the logbook, Anna and Joe still own the property and they together go, the kids stay home. The end had come at a time when two out of five original cast members only made guest cameos or got mentioned. A week after production wrapped, this entry was written on the computer and promotion for a DVD commenced. The prospect of a reboot was killed off after Nick filed a legal document to prohibit such a production. Over time, interest faded away and the log's ending successfully secured it as timeless.

To further make it timeless, it was proposed to pretend the log was produced 1977-82, when classic TV was created.
